

FOR THE LENTEN SEASON

It is with pleasure that we can announce to those who strictly observe Lent that we have without doubt the most complete assortment of the different

Lenten Delicacies

Including the Anchovies (a small fish of the Herring tribe which is esteemed for its rich and peculiar flavor), the Thon or Tunny Fish (a member of the Mackerel family, and to our notion, the most delicious piece of fish eating obtainable), Caviar (a popular delicacy during the fast seasons of Russia, Italy, Greece and Turkey, and which is relished by Americans), and many other Lenten foodstuffs which are well known to the American buying public.

These goods are packed in cans of a size and price to suit the purchaser. A trial will convince you of their high quality.

FRIDAY, MARCH 31, 1905.

The man with wheat will make a winning in the Panhandle this year.

For the coming of summer there is only impatience in the Panhandle. Under the present conditions it is just like starting a mint.

There are better things than Texas oil wells. A farm in the Panhandle will produce an income larger, on a far less investment.

If President Roosevelt really wanted to see a sky blue time he should arrange his trip so as to be in Amarillo during the session of the cattlemen's convention. Usually pretty well up to snuff, the president is losing a glorious opportunity for a flyer away from the simple life in this instance.

Roswell wants Amarillo to join in the race circuit that is projected to take in Carlsbad, Roswell, Portales and Hereford, and there should not be any difficulty about it. There are many lovers of fine horses and some very fast animals in Amarillo and surrounding country, and a big meeting would attract many people and much money to the city.

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN has undertaken the job of removing the hide from Peabody of Colorado, and it must be confessed that he has left little to be desired in the skinning process. Inasmuch as every other decent man in America has been engaged in the same occupation for some months now, it would seem, however, that William's task, albeit a labor of love, was somewhat of a superfluity.

GEN. NELSON A. MILES has given no clearer proof of his capitulation to the senilifying influences of time than his emergence from the silence of forty years to justify his action at the capture of Jefferson Davis. It is an average lifetime since that incident, and it were far better that he should have kept his grim silence to the end. His explanations fail to explain, his justifications fail to justify, and America wants to forget.

VENEZUELA is a mighty small country and President Castro is a small statesman to correspond or he would not have forgotten the way Uncle Sam saved his bacon a few years ago, and now he wants a taste of the big stick, which is held up on account of the influence mostly of the American asphalt trust, and apparently of that wonderfully conceived and abnormally developed principle, the Monroe doctrine.

In the fervor of the spring the matter of the wagon bridge over the Canadian on the road to Dumas should not be forgotten by the people of Amarillo. That is a mighty fruitful section, directly tributary to Amarillo, and another winter should not be allowed to come without the structure having been built. We owe it to those that are helping to build up the commercial greatness of Amarillo.

We have been alternately sorry and amused at the struggles of New Mexico for statehood, indignant at the shamless vilification of that division of the union, and diverted by the action of its territorial legislature, but for all that the whole southwest must admit that in the construction of the great highway through the mountain from Las Vegas to Santa Fe the territory has been the pioneer in a policy that ought to have been inaugurated a long time ago, namely in utilizing the labor of convicts upon the public roads, in building a series of permanent highways that will endure through all time. In such lines the labor of the convict does not come in competition with that of the free, and the unfortunates are made to pay for their keep in a way that is better for them as well as the public body. The movement really should be national, all convicts being employed on similar work. It is the correct solution of a very perplexing question, and one that will be of lasting benefit, both to the offenders and the people who pay the freight.

FORTY YEARS AFTER APPOMATTOX.

Forty years ago tomorrow began the beginning of the end of Appomattox, which fell on the 9th of April, 1865, with a crash that shook the south to its foundations and all but banished hope from the hearts of the Sons of the Confederacy.

Appomattox may be viewed today as a war event having a peculiar distinction. The verdict of April 9, 1865, has proved a final one. At the end of forty years its portent as a factor in human destiny stands out no less boldly than that of Yorktown, which is nearly a century and a quarter behind us. The judgment of history upon decisive battles must often be ambiguous and inconclusive. Waterloo crushed Napoleon I., but that for which Corsican stood—Napoleonism—erected its front again and had to be once more dethroned at Sedan, fifty-five years after Waterloo. Even yet the Bonaparte specter hovers over republican France.

It is difficult, too, to determine the precise period in the development of Greece when a second Marathon was seen to be impossible and the decisive character of the marvelous victory won by Miltiades became manifest. And Yorktown may have to be fought over before the fate of North America is decided. But the cause that went down at Appomattox was lost forever. Sons of Yankees and sons of Johnnies may one day come to blows, but not over the apple of 1861. They may shake hands across some new bloody chasm, but the chasm bridged by Grant and Lee is filled into the level with adamant.

Appomattox was not a sudden crushing of the defeated which forced the reluctant cry, "Enough!" It was a sequel to fighting, not itself a fight, a climax foreseen for months and for which both leaders and both armies had rehearsed their respective parts. After Gettysburg the south knew that its cause was hopeless, and after Gettysburg the north knew that one day it would dictate terms to its vanquished brethren.

So Appomattox, when it came, partook of the nature of a national love feast. There was no wild triumph, for long delayed and dearly bought victory had discounted joy. There was no mourning, for a lingering death had dulled the pangs of sorrow. Lee's white flag was a truce with pain. It covered the victors as well as the vanquished.

The true meaning of Appomattox grows clearer as the nation waxes in consequence. But for Appomattox there would be no great American power today. The twentieth century Lees and Grants, Gordons and Sheridans, Sheridans and Stuarts, have a common passion as well as a common flag. The burden of their mingled shouts is "Union!" "Sail on, sail on, oh, ship of state," is the song of every people, but "Sail on, oh, Union, strong and great," applies to but one people under the sun.

Men may change flags, but human passion is ineradicable. Federation of separable states went down in a consuming fire. The indissoluble Union of separate states arose from the ashes. Before the world we date from Yorktown; between ourselves, from Appomattox.

Waste Through Ignorance.

"There are still extensive regions in the United States where barn manure is considered a farm nuisance. In a county in Oregon the neighbor is welcome to haul away this manure, and that neighbor is likely to be a thrifty German with a large garden; in other Oregon counties the manure is burned. In a California county the manure is dumped into ravines; it goes to the creek in Oklahoma; it is hauled to a hole in the ground or put on one side of the field in Kansas; in South Dakota farmers burn it to be rid of it, and sometimes burn it for fuel. In North Dakota farmers haul barn manure to piles and leave it there until it disappears; farmers in Missouri deposit it by the roadside, and in Idaho scrapers are used, and it is often seen piled as high as a barn.

fennel, elsewhere that it produces weeds, and in various counties that it has such an effect of poisoning the soil that farmers are afraid of it." (Yearbook, Dept. of Agriculture, 1903, p. 447).

In the same Yearbook, on page 97, Secretary Wilson says, and no one ought to doubt his knowledge of this fact—"Foreign countries have many ideas and practice which we can study to advantage, and these studies of foreign systems should be continued until our farmers are informed as to the methods of every country in the world where irrigation is practised."

practically confined to some of the cotton producing counties of Texas. The damage is 50 per cent of the infested territory, and as the normal cotton crop of the United States is estimated to represent a value of $500,000,000, the probable ultimate damage, when the pest if not checked, has spread over the entire cotton belt may amount to about $250,000,000 a year.—Ex.
